I Am Glad You Are Here...

The goal of this book is to create an environment of support along with hosting resource and tools which guide individuals who struggle because of bullying.

You might have picked up this booklet for numerous reasons.

You might have a friend or loved one who struggles, and you are seeking to learn more about what they are going through and how you can support them.

You also could be struggling with bullies yourself and may wonder what to do.

No matter the reason you are here, you are welcome. We are glad you are reading this and hope to share insight which offers you guidance.

As you go through the next few pages, know I believe in your future and hope you find all of the tools you might be looking for to help you or someone you know to take action and fight back against bullying which seeks to call the shots in life.

Because each of our stories—are far from over.

Let's Admit, This Is Hard

I want to acknowledge its hard to know how to find ways to take healthy action steps.

Healing is not a one time event. It is a process. Throughout that process, there are numerous obstacles. This must be acknowledged. Yet, even with the challenge, I believe you or someone you care for has what it takes to make it through.

We are rooting for each of you out there, not only once someone completes a journey, but every step inside it.

If you or someone you care for is in danger of harm, please contact one of the numbers below or turn to the resource section at the back of this book for places to turn.

What Is Bullying?

The American Psychological Association defines bullying as, “a form of aggressive behavior in which someone intentionally and repeatedly causes another person injury or discomfort.”¹

Bullying can take several forms. Some are more pronounced, while others can be subtle. No matter the form of bullying, mistreatment of any kind can cause significant distress or harm to another.

HelpGuide.org shares three main categories of bullying, including²:

- Physical Bullying
- Verbal Bullying
- Relational Bullying
- Cyberbullying

Each form of bullying is stemmed from a bully’s desire for power. Yet, the platform or environment in which it occurs, as well as the form of torment varies.

Physical bullying is characterized by hitting, kicking, or causing any physical damage to another person’s body. It may or may not be paired with verbal, relational, or cyberbullying.

Verbal bullying is characterized by a verbal defamation of another person. This can be cruel statements about an individual’s looks, personality, affiliations, religion, orientation, or a host of any other personal features.

Relational bullying is characterized by exclusion or relational positioning in which someone's desire for belonging is used against them. Although physical contact is not generally paired with this form of bullying, the negative impact can be significant.

Cyberbullying is characterized by cruel online communication either in social media platforms, website comments, messaging forums, or a host of other digital spaces. Cyberbullying presents additional problems for the bullied in that online forums provide access for thousands to witness damaging statements.

If you, or someone you care for, are being bullied, I want you to know it is valid if you feel pain, whether or not that pain is physical.

While the goal of a bully is to diminish another in order to gain a sense of power, your identity comes from more than anything a person or group of people do or say.

I am here to let you know you are more, and your story— is far from over.

What Is Adult Bullying?

Though we may be tempted to believe bullying is an adolescent issue, up to 31% of adults in a recent survey reported being bullied, in which the bullying was defined as being subjected to repeated, negative behavior intended to harm or intimidate.³

BullyingStatistics.org names several types of adult bullies, including⁴:

- Narcissistic Adult Bully
- Impulsive Adult Bully
- Physical Bully
- Verbal Assault Bully
- Secondary Adult Bully

These forms of mistreatment can commonly occur online in the home, or in the workplace.

Forbes released an article stating survey statistics showed up to 75% of workers reported some form of workplace bullying⁵ and has numerous tips for how to handle mistreatment within the workplace available here:

Forbes - 75% Of Workers Are Being Bullied

Thier follow up article, “How To Atop A Workplace Bully In Their Tracks” also provides powerful tips.

How Many Individuals Struggle?

- Among high school students, 15.5% are cyberbullied and 20.2% are bullied on school property.⁶
- Only 40–50% of cyberbullying targets are aware of the identity of the perpetrator.⁷
- A meta-analysis found that students facing peer victimization are 2.2 times more likely to have suicide ideation and 2.6 times more likely to attempt suicide than students not facing victimization.⁸
- A slightly higher portion of female than of male students report being bullied at school (23% vs. 19%). In contrast, a higher percentage of male than of female students report being physically bullied (6% vs. 4%) and threatened with harm (5% vs. 3%).⁹
- Bullied students reported that bullying occurred in the following places: the hallway or stairwell at school (42%), inside the classroom (34%), in the cafeteria (22%), outside on school grounds (19%), on the school bus (10%), and in the bathroom or locker room (9%).⁹
- 31% of adults in a recent survey reported being bullied.³
- 75% of workers reported some form of workplace bullying⁵

Guilt Versus Shame

When it comes to bullying, individuals will often take a sense of shame into their identity and believe they are worth less than they are because of another's words or actions. I am here to tell you there is an important distinction between guilt and shame.

Guilt is the aftermath of an action. It can be healthy—as it lets us know what we did was wrong. But in the case of bullying, victims rarely do anything to trigger the mistreatment. Instead, a bully uses shame to try to take power over an individual by claiming they have a right to name another person's identity. But it is not true.

Guilt can be healthy. Our words, actions, and behaviors have consequences. Guilt helps us to take ownership, learn, and grow. Shame, however, doesn't offer a solution. It just grips our thoughts & emotions in a vice.

How do we escape the trap of shame? I want to continue this critical conversation in the video below.

What To Do If Someone Shares About Bullying

Learning that someone you care for is being bullied can be painful. No one wants a friend or loved one to feel internal or external pain.

The reasons, cause and effect behaviors, and thoughts and emotions which cause bullying vary greatly. As you lean in and learn more, you can enter into conversations with a healthy perspective. In order to do so, we suggest to:

- Build Them Up
- Point To Help
- Educate Yourself

For a more in-depth discussion about these points, check out the video below.

Can I Intervene In A Case Of Bullying?

If you believe someone you care for is in danger of being bullied, it can be easy to become frozen, unsure what to do or how to help. You may wonder how to intervene. In many instances, you may not be present when they are being bullied. This complicates things.

I know—because I have been there myself. But, there have been a few key factors which have helped me work through the options and knowing what is right.

My Personal #1 – If it feels like time to act—it probably is. But acting, may not mean immediate confrontation of a bully. It might mean getting in touch with an education system, community leader, family, friend, or someone who is present when bullying is occurring and can intervene in the proper channels.

The Real #1 – If the situation of bullying involves assault and if you are a mandated reporter, and you learn someone within your influence is in an threat of harm or danger—either at their own hand or someone else's—it is time to act.

Legal requirements vary from state to state. I would encourage you to check with your local laws and follow the stated course of action. That being said—make sure you also are following your organization's policy and procedures to make sure the right people have been informed and the person you care for is receiving the best form of support and guidance from your whole team.

But, What If I Am Concerned About A Family Or Friend?

The truth is, there are not policy and procedure guidelines for relationships. And intervening can have ramifications for that person—and your relationship. This is valid. It is something which must be discussed.

I do not know all of the ins and outs of your specific situation. But, you can talk with someone who can give direct guidance for what you are facing, provide you with educational tips which match your situation, and help you feel confident in taking your next step.

This is why I highly recommend you calling a hotline. They can help you gauge the situation and know what your options are to get someone help. As always, if you believe someone is in immediate threat of harm that you should not call 911 immediately.

Yet, the question remains, “What about backlash?” Let’s discuss the matter in the video below:

A Conversation On Depression Medication And Natural Remedy

When thinking about sharing a story with a support professional, we may believe the first thing they will do is prescribe talk therapy or medication.

This is likely to be true. If that concerns us, it might help to do a little bit of research in order to understand what it means to take medication, the side effects, and what you can expect when considering options.

In the video below, we have links to articles and voices which are more qualified to share.

Please note: In the instance of bullying, it is likely individuals could need more guidance and tools than depression or anxiety medication alone. This conversation is only offered as a means of alleviating the unknowns about medication and alternative options. Please consult with a medical doctor for all decisions regarding health and mental well-being.

What Is The Right Type Of Help? - Video Discussion

Reiterating Why You Offer Support

When an individual struggles because of bullying, they often are caught in a mental battle of wondering why they are worth your time, effort, or love.

The question in their mind constantly is, “Why someone would want to help me?”

They may also believe help will be temporary until someone sees them as a burden or as a person who is just “too much.”

Because of these factors, It is important for those offering support to be a continual source of reassurance in why you want to support them—why you want to see them reach a place of wholeness.

This does not mean they dictate our lives or we cater to every whim. That is not what I am talking about. Healthy boundaries are important in every relationship, even ones which have serious complications in the midst.

Yet, I believe one of the best things we can do for someone who is struggling with mental health is to continuously and consistently reiterate the why behind our actions.

So, “Why would anyone want to help someone who is fighting to shift the story of bullying?”

I wholeheartedly believe it is because our care for that person gives us compassion and insight into three things: their future, their pathway, and their value.

Their Future

You have an intrinsic belief that as someone you care for walks a path of wholeness and healing—they have a future.

Their Pathway

You may not have the professional skill to offer the treatment or healing needed, yet you want to be with them on their pathway as they seek it out. You want to offer tangible guidance and see them win in the journey.

Their Value

You have a foundational belief—that the person you care for has value. When you speak with them—it is directly tied into a personal reason why you believe they matter, have importance, and that the outcome of their life is important to you.

The Obstacles In Offering Help

It is fair to talk about the obstacles someone you care for may meet along their journey. It is incredibly tough to watch them face one or all of the following. I acknowledge the fact these moments can create tremendous setback or make it difficult for them, or maybe even you, to want to continue to fight for wholeness. I encourage you to continue to seek support and encouragement for yourself as you journey alongside of them. May you have the strength to continue to fight on.

What To Do When A Loved One Pushes Back

Getting push back when you try to help, is frustrating. As you engage with them, remember it is important to:

1. Go at their pace.
2. Own what is yours.
3. And yet, know this may not be about you.

Recognize push back is often overcome by:

- Being consistent.
- Stating why you are for them.
- Reaffirming them.
- Apologizing for previous disappointments.

Lastly, be honest. It might be good to share how their behavior made you feel.

For a more in-depth discussion about these points, and how to overcome them, check out the video below.

Building A Mental Health Safety Plan

If you are taking a stand against mental health struggles, you know it often fights back. Taking action each time is a battle which is not easy. Yet, we hope having a pathway helps you continue to seek wholeness.

Please note: Even with the best of plans, there are times in which a crisis is stronger than our plan. In those moments, seek immediate, professional help. The following ideas are not intended to take the place of professional help.

One such resource which has a fantastic list of tools and resources for creating a safety plan is Challenge The Storm. You can check out their advice here: <http://challengethestorm.org/safety-plans-mental-health/>

4 Check Ins To Gauge If Its Time To Move Towards A Safety Plan

Deciding if its an off moment or a battle of depression or anxiety.

1. Check In With Yourself

Give yourself the space to see how you are really doing.

2. Check In With Rest And Play

Do something you love—just because you love it.

3. Check In With Support

If you have begun to notice signals that depression wants to claim your story—it's probably time to check in with individuals who care for you.

4. Check In With Resources

If depression is fighting hard, it might be time to fight back by adding additional resources to your tool kit.

The Goal Is Wholeness

Wholeness is about a state of contentment and peace in a life. It doesn't eliminate the past or any previous pain, instead it acknowledges how that pain has affected us—all while striving to form a new narrative.

Wholeness is about freedom—and I believe it is possible for each individual to discover for themselves.

Is it easy? Not at all. The pathway can be long and come with obstacles which may make us feel as if we may not make it.

But with the right support and tools—I intrinsically believe we can.

I welcome you, and those you care for, to find it.

Identity Goes Beyond The Struggle

In the core of who I am—I am convinced none of us are defined by our struggles. Our identity goes far beyond what anyone stole from us, did to us, or how they disappointed us.

While it may be true you or someone you love has faced a deep struggle or have been treated in ways they did not deserve, I believe it does not have to be the key identifier of what makes an individual—them.

Wholeness is still available. Though it requires a journey, it's a pathway to be free of pain's influences—as if it was the only thing to define a life. I believe each of us still have life in front of us and it is filled with the ability for hope, the ability to make a difference in other's lives, and the ability to go out there and have positive and meaningful impact.
