I Am Glad You Are Here...

The world needs individuals who care for one another. If you are reading this book because you want to provide encouragement and support to those who struggle, I want to say how proud of you I am.

I also want to acknowledge its hard to know how to help someone. We may want to be the one to provide a solution, but often, this is out of our control.

Even so, I believe learning about the issue can help us know how to be there for others. When we match our concern and empathy, along with insightful knowledge, it can help us to be prepared to point others in the right direction.

I Want To Be Clear In The Beginning...

Unless you are a professional who has been trained to know how to step in and offer solutions to those who struggle because of abuse, you may not be able to fix the root cause of why someone you care for struggles because of abuse.

This does not mean, however, that they do not need you. Having support from someone who has insight into the issues surrounding abuse and who knows what professional resources are available—is key. The best thing anyone who is struggling with trauma can do is seek out professional care. We can not take away the good or bad thoughts or feelings of another. But, we all can strive to be supportive friends and loved ones. The fact you are reading this tells me this is who you want to be.

The things which you and I can do, is seek to be the most prepared we can be in order to be individuals who can point others towards getting the best possible help they can.

My goal is to help you to learn how to understand the complex topic of suicidal thoughts a little bit better, so you have insight into how to care for those who may struggle.

If you or someone you care for is in danger of harm, please contact one of the numbers below or turn to the resource section at the back of this book.

of lost hope

What Is Abuse?

According to Healthyplace.com, “Abuse is defined as any action that intentionally harms or injures another person.”<sup>1</sup>

While the most commonly discussed forms of abuse are emotional/psychological, physical, and sexual abuse—Healthyplace.com describes additional forms of abuse. These include:

- Verbal
- Financial
- Elder
- Spiritual<sup>2</sup>

For a full list of what characterizes each form, we welcome you to visit: Healthyplace.com

The Latin origin of the word abuse means “to wrongly use.”<sup>3</sup> Do you know what this means? Anything or anyone who has been abused has been treated in a way which was not part of original design or a healthy interaction.

To put it plainly—it was wrong. Anytime abuse occurs—it goes against natural design.

This is why there are devastating outcomes associated with any form of mistreatment from one person to another. And I am here to tell you that those negative impact are 100% valid, legitimate, and real. I have no doubt you carry a significant burden in which you might feel as if you have to carry it alone. But I am here to tell you—you do not have to. And you are not alone.

If you or someone you care for are struggling because of past or present abuse—you have every right to think and feel as you do. Because what happened to you—was wrong.

Though the journey to shift an incomplete story which was affected by abuse is long and comes with numerous challenges, I believe it is possible to find the wholeness you deserve. It was wrong that someone's choice to harm you has cost you such a steep price of healing—yet you are worth every step of the healing you were born to find.

Your name is not unwanted. Your name is not abused. Your name is not victim. Your identity is worth so much more.

How Many Individuals Struggle?

Physical

1 in 4 women (24.3%) and 1 in 7 men (13.8%) aged 18 and older in the US have been the victim of severe physical violence by an intimate partner in their lifetime.<sup>4</sup>

43% of dating college women report experiencing violent and abusive dating behaviors including physical, sexual, tech, verbal or controlling abuse.<sup>5</sup>

1 in 4 dating teens is abused or harassed online or through texts by their partners.<sup>6</sup>

Emotional/Psychological

48% of both men and women reported experiencing psychologically aggressive behaviors by their partner.<sup>7</sup>

Sexual

1 out of 3 girls and 1 out of 5 boys will be sexually abused before they reach age 18.<sup>8</sup>

90% of child sexual abuse victims know the perpetrator in some way. 68% are abused by a family member.<sup>9</sup>

For male victims, more than half (52.4%) reported being raped by an acquaintance, and 15.1% by a stranger.<sup>10</sup>

Nearly 6 out of 10 sexual assaults occur in the victim's home or the home of a friend, relative or neighbor.<sup>11</sup>

Neglect

CPS protects more than 3 million children. Approximately 3.4 million children received an investigation or alternative response from child protective services agencies. 2.3 million children received prevention services.<sup>12</sup>

Guilt Versus Shame

When it comes to abuse, victims will often take a sense of shame into their identity and believe they are worth less than they are because of another's words or actions. I am here to tell you there is an important distinction between guilt and shame.

Guilt is the aftermath of an action. It can be healthy—as it lets us know what we did was wrong. But in the case of abuse, victims didn't do anything to trigger the mistreatment. Instead, an abuser uses shame to try to take power over an individual by claiming they have a right to name another person's identity. But it is not true.

Guilt can be healthy. Our words, actions, and behaviors have consequences. Guilt helps us to take ownership, learn, and grow. Shame, however, doesn't offer a solution. It just grips our thoughts & emotions in a vice. In a sense, it presents a false reality.

How do we escape the trap of shame? I want to continue this critical conversation in the video below.

Is It Okay To Ask About Abuse?

The fact you are asking, it a good thing. Number one, it shows how much you care for someone. And second, it shows a sense of care in how you approach them.

Depending on your relationship with the person, it is absolutely okay for you to ask. In some cases, it might even be your responsibility. Check your local and state laws under “mandated reporting,” as in many instances if you believe someone is in threat of danger or harm, it is time to act.

And yet, action is often only possible after having a conversation to know what factors could be creating stress or trauma for the individual you care for.

Check out our video below in which we will discuss:

- When is it time to ask?
- How should I approach someone?
- What should I say and not say?

What To Do If Someone Shares About Abuse

Learning that someone you care for wrestles because of past or present abuse can be incredibly painful. No one wants a friend or loved one to feel intense internal or external pain.

The reasons, cause and effect behaviors, and thoughts and emotions which come because of abuse range from short-term triggers to extreme distress. As you lean in and learn more, you can enter into conversations with a healthy perspective. In order to do so, we suggest to:

- Point To Help
- Educate Yourself
- Be Sure To Process

Am I Causing Trouble If I Intervene?

If you believe someone you care for is in danger of harm because of past or present abuse, it can be easy to become frozen, unsure what to do or how to help. It may even feel as if intervening would make things worse.

I know—because I have been there myself. But, there have been a few key factors which have helped me work through the options and know what is right.

My Personal #1 – If it feels like time to act—it probably is. In truth, it is usually fear of repercussions which holds me back more than reasoning which says it is time. Over the years, I have learned to trust my gut.

The Real #1 – If you are a mandated reporter, and you learn someone within your influence is in an threat of harm or danger—either at their own hand or someone else’s—it is time to act.

Legal requirements vary from state to state. I would encourage you to check with your local laws and follow the stated course of action. In addition—make sure you also are following your organization’s policy and procedures to make sure the right people have been informed and the person you care for is receiving the best form of support and guidance from your whole team.

But, What If I Am Concerned About Family Or A Friend?

The truth is, there are not policy and procedure guidelines for relationships. And intervening can have ramifications for that person—and your relationship. This is valid. It is something which must be discussed. But if you are in a situation in which you can speak up and stop abuse, the time to do so, is now.

I do not know all of the ins and outs of your specific situation. But, you can talk with someone who can give direct guidance for what you are facing, provide you with educational tips which match your situation, and help you feel confident in taking your next step.

This is why I highly recommend you calling a hotline. They can help you gauge the situation and know what your options are to get someone help. As always, if you believe someone is in immediate threat of harm that you should call 911 immediately. Yet, the question remains, “What about backlash?” Let’s discuss the matter in the video below:

What Kind Of Help Exists?

Due to the intensive nature of abuse and the fact it speaks to deep internal struggles, finding help for abuse usually begins by reaching out for help. This might include sharing with a skilled professional. This often happens after someone tells a trusted individual life who can help them connect with that professional.

If you are the individual they turn to, be sure to encourage them. Reiterate that anything which is locked inside of their thoughts and feelings deserves a place to be processed in a safe environment which can give them actionable guidance and tools.

Additionally, there are a host of tools which can help you both find steps to taking action. These include:

- Apps Which Offer Mental Health Support
- Communities With Offer Support
- Finding A Professional

A Conversation On Depression Medication And Natural Remedy

When thinking about sharing a story with a support professional, we may believe the first thing they will do is prescribe talk therapy or medication.

This is likely to be true. If that concerns us, it might help to do a little bit of research in order to understand what it means to take medication, the side effects, and what you can expect when considering options.

In the video below, we have links to articles and voices which are more qualified to share.

Please note: In the instance of abuse, it is likely individuals will need more guidance and tools than depression or anxiety medication alone. This conversation is only offered as a means of alleviating the unknowns about medication and alternative options. Please consult with a medical doctor for all decisions regarding health and mental well-being.

Reiterating Why You Offer Support

When an individual struggles with abuse, they often are caught in a mental battle of wondering why they are worth your time, effort, or love.

The question in their mind constantly is, “Why someone would want to help me?”

They may also believe help will be temporary until someone sees them as a burden or as a person who is just “too much.”

Because of these factors, it is important for those offering support to be a continual source of reassurance in why you want to support them—why you want to see them reach a place of wholeness.

This does not mean they dictate our lives or we cater to every whim. That is not what I am talking about. Healthy boundaries are important in every relationship, even ones which have serious complications in the midst.

Yet, I believe one of the best things we can do for someone who is struggling because of abuse is to continuously and consistently reiterate the why behind our actions.

So, “Why would anyone want to help someone who is fighting to shift the story of abuse?”

I wholeheartedly believe it is because our care for that person gives us compassion and insight into three things: their future, their pathway, and their value.

Their Future

You have an intrinsic belief that as someone you care for walks a path of wholeness and healing—they have a future.

Their Pathway

You may not have the professional skill to offer the treatment or healing needed, yet you want to be with them on their pathway as they seek it out. You want to offer tangible guidance and see them win in the journey.

Their Value

You have a foundational belief—that the person you care for has value. When you speak with them—it is directly tied into a personal reason why you believe they matter, have importance, and that the outcome of their life is important to you.

The Obstacles In Offering Help

It is fair to talk about the obstacles someone you care for may meet along their journey. It is incredibly tough to watch them face one or all of the following. I acknowledge the fact these moments can create tremendous setback or make it difficult for them, or maybe even you, to want to continue to fight for wholeness. I encourage you to continue to seek support and encouragement for yourself as you journey alongside of them. May you have the strength to continue to fight on.

- Help Seems Hopeless
- A Question Of Worth
- Lack Of Energy
- Disappointing Attempts

Am I A Failure If Someone I Care For Won't Stop Hurting?

If someone you care constantly struggles because of their past, it can be incredibly painful.

You likely have noticed your own sense of worry, fears, and emotions for that person. This is natural, because you love them and want them to be healthy.

But the one things we don't talk about is the fact that beneath all of this, you may also feel a sense of failure.

If you feel as if you have failed at being a good friend or supportive loved one because the individual you care for has not found complete healing yet, I want you to know I understand. Your feelings are valid. But, you are not a failure.

In this instance, we need to change the parameters for what true success and failure really are. Let's continue the conversation in the video below:

What To Do When A Loved One Pushes Back

Getting pushback when you try to help, is frustrating. As you engage with them, remember it is important to:

1. Go at their pace.
2. Own what is yours.
3. And yet, know this may not be about you.

Recognize pushback is often overcome by:

- Being consistent.
- Stating why you are for them.
- Reaffirming them.
- Apologizing for previous disappointments.

Lastly, be honest. It might be good to share how their behavior made you feel.

Building A Mental Health Safety Plan

If you are taking a stand to heal from abuse, you know mental health often fights back. Taking action each time is a battle which is not easy. Yet, we hope that having a pathway can help you continue to seek wholeness.

Please note: Even with the best of plans, there are times in which a crisis is stronger than our plan. In those moments, seek immediate, professional help. The following ideas on how to fight back are not intended to take the place of professional help.

The Goal Is Wholeness

Wholeness is about a state of contentment and peace in a life. It doesn't eliminate the past or any previous pain, instead it acknowledges how that pain has affected us—all while striving to form a new narrative.

Wholeness is about freedom—and I believe it is possible for each individual to discover for themselves.

Is it easy? Not at all. The pathway can be long and come with obstacles which may make us feel as if we may not make it.

But with the right support and tools—I intrinsically believe we can.

I welcome you, and those you care for, to find it.

The Goal Is Wholeness - Video Discussion

Identity Goes Beyond The Struggle

In the core of who I am—I am convinced none of us are defined by our struggles. Our identity goes far beyond what anyone stole from us, did to us, or how they disappointed us.

While it may be true you or someone you love has faced a deep struggle or have been treated in ways they did not deserve, I believe it does not have to be the key identifier of what makes an individual—them.

Wholeness is still available. Though it requires a journey, it's a pathway to be free of pain's influences—as if it was the only thing to define a life. I believe each of us still have life in front of us and it is filled with the ability for hope, the ability to make a difference in other's lives, and the ability to go out there and have positive and meaningful impact.
