How To Use This Book

Depending on what you are looking for, you can use this book in a variety of ways. Feel free to skim, read every line, or just check out our videos.

We believe important topics call for important conversations which is why some of our material is presented via videos. In order to access the videos, you will need to click the link if you are reading via a digital device such as Kindle. If you have a physical copy of the book, you can access the links via QR codes.

A QR Code looks like this and can be scanned using your device's camera:

On an iOS device, simply open the camera app and point your camera over the code. A notification will pop up, asking if you would like to head to YouTube.

On an Android device, you will need to download a QR code app. Our team recommends several options, all of which are free as of this printing:

- QR & Barcode Scanner
- QR Code Reader
- Free QR Scanner by Avira
- QR DROID PRIVATE
- Kaspersky QR Scanner

I Am Glad You Are Here...

The world needs individuals who care for one another. If you are reading this book because you want to provide encouragement and support to those who struggle, I want to say how proud of you I am.

I also want to acknowledge its hard to know how to help someone. We may want to be the one to provide a solution, but often, this is out of our control.

Even so, I believe learning about the issue can help us know how to be there for others. When we match our concern and empathy, along with insightful knowledge, it can help us to be prepared to point others in the right direction.

I want to be clear in the beginning...

Unless you are a professional who has been trained to know how to step in and offer solutions to those who struggle with self-injury, you may not be able to fix the root cause of why someone you care for struggles with self-harm.

This does not mean, however, that they do not need you. Having support from someone who has insight into the issues surrounding self-harm and who knows what professional resources are available—is key. The best thing anyone who is struggling with self-harm can do is seek out professional care. We can not take away the good or bad thoughts or feelings of another. But, we all can strive to be supportive friends and loved ones. The fact you are reading this tells me this is who you want to be.

The things which you and I can do, is seek to be the most prepared we can be in order to be individuals who can point others towards getting the best possible help they can.

My goal is to help you to learn how to understand the complex topic of self-harm a little bit better, so you have insight into how to care for those who may struggle.

If you or someone you care for is in danger of harm, please contact one of the numbers below or turn to the resource section at the back of this book.

SHIFTING THE NARRATIVE
of lost hope

What Is Self-Harm?

Nonsuicidal self-injury (NSSI) involves socially unacceptable, self-inflicted harm to one's body without intent to die.<sup>1</sup> Healthyplace.com reports the most common forms of NSSI include:

- Cutting
- Burning
- Interfering with wound healing (picking or re-opening wounds)
- Punching or hitting oneself or other objects
- Inserting objects into the skin
- Purposely bruising or breaking one's bones
- Certain forms of hair pulling<sup>2</sup>

Although, NSSI is not utilized as a means of ending a life, there is a correlation between the two. In a large study, 70% of adolescents who engaged in NSSI had made at least 1 suicide attempt and 55% made multiple suicide attempts.<sup>1</sup>

How Many Individuals Struggle?

Each year, 1 in 5 females and 1 in 7 males engage in self-injury.<sup>5</sup>

90 percent of people who engage in self-harm begin during their teen or pre-adolescent years.<sup>5</sup>

12-15 year olds are most susceptible to begin self-harming.<sup>6</sup>

Adolescents have the highest rate of self-injurious behaviors, with about 17% admitting to self-injury at least once in their life.<sup>7</sup>

College Students. Studies find that about 15% of college students report engaging in self-harm.<sup>7</sup>

Aside from very young children, adults are the least likely group of people to follow through with self-injury. Only about 5% of adults have self-injured in their lifetime.<sup>7</sup>

Nearly 50 percent of those who engage in self-injury activities have been sexually abused.<sup>5</sup>

Females comprise 60 percent of those who engage in self-injurious behavior.<sup>5</sup>

Approximately two million cases are reported annually in the U.S.<sup>5</sup>

Why Would Someone Choose To Harm Themselves?

MentalHealth.Net cites the top reasons behind Self-Injury include the ability to:

1. Distract themselves, alter the focus of their attention, or regain control over their minds when experiencing pressing, unavoidable and overwhelming feelings or thoughts.
2. Release tension associated with strong emotions or overwhelming thoughts.
3. Feel something physical when they are otherwise dissociated and numb.
4. Express themselves or communicate and/or document strong emotions they are feeling and cannot otherwise articulate.
5. Punish themselves.
6. Experience a temporary but intense feeling of euphoria that occurs in the immediate aftermath of self-harm.<sup>4</sup>

Myths About Self-Harm

Several myths are obstacles for those seeking support for the thoughts and feelings which push them to turn towards self-harm as a coping mechanism. These myths include:

1. Self-harm is for attention.
2. Self-harm is only serious in cases of deep wounds.
3. Self-harming is about suicide.

If these myths are a barrier to someone you know receiving help or support, I encourage you to help them talk with someone who is skilled. They know the myths are incorrect and want to know the thoughts and feelings which matter most to someone you care for.

For a deeper discussion on these myths, please turn to the video below. And for a list of skilled individuals they can talk to, turn to the back of this booklet in the “Communities Which Offer Support” section.

Warning Signs And Risks

Understanding the warning signs of self-injury can help us know when it is time to talk with a friend or loved one or point them to skilled, professional care. Here are few things to look out for which go beyond wearing long sleeves.

- Family members telling you that they are finding razors or knives in strange locations.<sup>8</sup>
- Regularly locking themselves away for long periods in their room or the bathroom.<sup>8</sup>
- The appearance of an abnormal number of bruises or scars.<sup>8</sup>
- Small, linear scratches, followed up by rational of accidents or brush offs like, 'The cat did it.'<sup>9</sup>
- Mood changes like depression or anxiety.<sup>9</sup>
- Out-of-control behavior.<sup>9</sup>
- Changes in relationships, communication, and school performance.<sup>9</sup>
- Expressing feelings of hopelessness or worthlessness.<sup>10</sup>
- Difficulties with relationships.<sup>10</sup>
- Blood stains on bedding, clothing, towels, or tissues.<sup>10</sup>
- Having sharp objects in their possession, including razors, safety pins, nail scissors, knives, needles, shards of glass, or bottle caps.<sup>10</sup>
- Increased isolation and social withdrawal.<sup>10</sup>
- Avoiding situations in which they need to reveal skin, such as swimming or changing in a locker room.<sup>10</sup>

Factors Which Aid Against Self-Harm

A 2003 journal article<sup>11</sup> on youth suicide risk and preventative interventions found several factors which had the power to protect against suicidal behavior.

Though our discussion is on non-suicidal self-injury, I believe, by reason and good judgment alone, that these same factors offer strong support and can help aid against self-harm:

Factors that protect against suicidal behavior include:

- a good parent-child relationship
- strong cultural or religious values
- an intact family
- a sense of connection with peer group and community.<sup>11</sup>

The Trap of Self-Harm

Several components within self-injury make it possible for someone to get caught in the trap of self-harm. An addictive cycle lies behind a challenging issue. By looking at these factors we can help others find ways to break it.

1. The Action

The action of non-suicidal self-injury offers several short-term “positives.” These can range from feeling a sense of control, the ability to feel after prolonged numbness, an external validation of internal pain, a signal for others to invest, and/or a release of endorphins.

2. The “Reward”

Because a short-term “positive” surfaces—and it is immediate—a learned behavior develops. This “reward” suggests a tool for coping has been found.

3. Guilt & Shame

Often, minutes after an act of self-injury, the “reward” passes—leaving a sense of deeply rooted guilt or shame. This compounds the problem which drove one to choose self-injury as a means of coping.

4. Intensification

Most addictive behaviors require intensification of the behavior in order to reach the same sense of reward. In the case of non-suicidal self-injury—this can prove to be extremely dangerous. Yet, a sense of shame often makes it extremely difficult. Isolation and withdrawal become a typical coping style—distancing one from wholeness.

Breaking The Cycle

If someone you care for is somewhere in the cycle—it is important for us to let them know we do not view them through the lens of shame. Let them know you believe there are legitimate, valid reasons why they chose to act in a behavior which was not healthy. You believe there is a story behind those reasons—and it is important.

Let them know you do not look at them any different because of the scars they carry which are external and internal. Neither one removes their right to belong. And you accept them as they are.

On the next page, we will explore guilt and shame—and discover how freedom is possible.

The Trap Self-Harm - Video Discussion

<https://youtu.be/KBLIs1wmE78>

Guilt Versus Shame

Guilt is the aftermath of an action. It can be healthy—as it lets us know what we did was wrong. Shame, on the other hand, is the cruel rebranding of our identity. It suggests that because of an action—we are somehow a different person. It seeks to stake a claim on who we are.

Guilt can be healthy. We need to understand the fact our words, actions, and behaviors have consequences. Guilt helps us to recognize those moments so we can take ownership of them, learn from them, and grow. Are there still consequences even after apologizing or seeking to make a situation right? Many times—the answer is yes. But there is a sense of rightness in it. Shame, however, doesn't offer a solution. It just grips our thoughts and emotions in a vice.

How do we escape the trap of shame? Because it is such a personal journey, I want to continue the conversation in the video below.

Is It Okay To Talk Bring Up The Topic Self-Harm?

If you are wondering if someone you care for is fighting self-harm, and you question if you should bring it up, it is likely time to talk about it, but it is important to broach the topic with care.

While it is ideal for them to come to you and open up, there are times in which it is critical for you to bring up your concern for them.

The reasons why individuals choose to self-harm range from short-term incidents to life-altering events. Some of these are internal. Others are external.

The reason, cause, or longevity behind each story affected by self-harm is valid—and we acknowledge it can create major hurdles on the path to seeking wholeness. But that does not mean the person you care for can not fight—and fight well. One of the ways we start to do that—is to talk about it.

What To Do After Someone Shares About Self-Harm

Learning that someone you care for is harming themselves can be incredibly painful. No one wants a friend or loved one to feel intense internal or external pain.

The reasons, cause and effect behaviors, and thoughts and emotions which lead someone to choose self-harm as a coping mechanism range from short-term triggers to extreme inner distress. As you lean in and learn more, you can enter into conversations with a healthy perspective. In order to do so, we suggest to:

- Avoid Judgment
- Process First
- Educate Yourself
- Acknowledge Further Incidents

What Kind Of Help Exists?

Due to the intensive nature of self-harm and the fact it speaks to deep internal struggles, finding help for self-harm usually begins by sharing with a skilled professional. This often happens after someone tells a trusted individual life who can help them connect with that skilled professional.

If you are the individual they turn to, be sure to encourage them. Reiterate that the pain which is locked inside of their thoughts and feelings deserves a place to be processed in a safe environment which can give them actionable guidance and tools.

Additionally, there are a host of tools which can help you both find steps to taking action. These include:

- Apps Which Offer Mental Health Support
- Communities With Offer Support
- Finding A Professional

A Conversation On Depression Medication And Natural Remedy

When thinking about sharing a story with a support professional, we may believe the first thing they will do is prescribe talk therapy or medication.

This is likely to be true. If that concerns us, it might help to do a little bit of research in order to understand what it means to take medication, the side effects, and what you can expect when considering options.

In the video below, we have links to articles and voices which are more qualified to share.

Please note: In the instance of self-harm, it is likely individuals will need more guidance and tools than depression or anxiety medication alone. This conversation is only offered as a means of alleviating the unknowns about medication and alternative options. Please consult with a medical doctor for all decisions regarding health and mental well-being.

Reiterating Why You Offer Support

When an individual struggles with self-harm, they often are caught in a mental battle of wondering why they are worth your time, effort, or love.

The question in their mind constantly is, “Why someone would want to help me?”

They may also believe help will be temporary until someone sees them as a burden or as a person who is just “too much.”

Because of these factors, It is important for those offering support to be a continual source of reassurance in why you want to support them—why you want to see them reach a place of wholeness.

This does not mean they dictate our lives or we cater to every whim. That is not what I am talking about. Healthy boundaries are important in every relationship, even ones which have mental health complications in the midst.

Yet, I believe one of the best things we can do for someone who is struggling with self-harm is to continuously and consistently reiterate the why behind our actions.

So, “Why would anyone want to help someone who is fighting to shift the story of self-harm?”

I wholeheartedly believe it is because our care for that person gives us compassion and insight into three things: their future, their pathway, and their value.

Their Future

You have an intrinsic belief that as someone you care for walks a path of wholeness and healing—they have a future.

Their Pathway

You may not have the professional skill to offer the treatment or healing needed, yet you want to be with them on their pathway as they seek it out. You want to offer tangible guidance and see them win in the journey.

Their Value

You have a foundational belief—that the person you care for has value. When you speak with them—it is directly tied into a personal reason why you believe they matter, have importance, and that the outcome of their life is important to you.

The Obstacles In Offering Help

It is fair to talk about the obstacles someone you care for may meet along their journey. It is incredibly tough to watch them face one or all of the following. I acknowledge the fact these moments can create tremendous setback or make it difficult for them, or maybe even you, to want to continue to fight for wholeness. I encourage you to continue to seek support and encouragement for yourself as you journey alongside of them. May you have the strength to continue to fight on.

- Help Seems Hopeless
- A Question Of Worth
- Lack Of Energy
- Disappointing Attempts

Am I A Failure If Someone I Care For Won't Stop Self-Harming?

If someone you care for is engaging in repetitive, non-suicidal self-injurious actions, it can be incredibly painful to watch them continue that behavior.

You likely have noticed your own sense of worry, fears, and emotions for that person. This is natural, because you love them and want them to be healthy.

But the one thing we don't talk about is the fact that beneath all of this, you may also feel a sense of failure.

If you feel as if you have failed at being a good friend or supportive loved one because the individual you care for has not ceased a harmful behavior, I want you to know I understand. Your feelings are valid. But, you are not a failure.

In this instance, we need to change the parameters for what true success and failure really are. Let's continue the conversation in the video below:

What To Do When A Loved One Pushes Back

Getting push back when you try to help, is frustrating. As you engage with them, remember it is important to:

1. Go at their pace.
2. Own what is yours.
3. And yet, know this may not be about you.

Recognize push back is often overcome by:

- Being consistent.
- Stating why you are for them.
- Reaffirming them.
- Apologizing for previous disappointments.

Lastly, be honest. It might be good to share how their behavior made you feel.

For a more in-depth discussion about these points, and how to overcome them, check out the video below.

Building A Safety Plan

If you are taking a stand against self-harm, you know it often fights back. Taking action each time is a battle which is not easy. Yet, we hope that having a pathway to fight back can help you continue to seek wholeness.

Please note: Even with the best of plans, there are times in which a crisis is stronger than our plan. In those moments, seek immediate, professional help. The following ideas on how to fight back against self-harm is not intended to take the place of professional help.

One such resource which has a fantastic list of tools and resources for creating a safety plan is Challenge The Storm. You can check out their advice here: <http://challengestorm.org/safety-plans-mental-health/>

The Goal Is Wholeness

Wholeness is about a state of contentment and peace in a life. It doesn't eliminate the past or any previous pain, instead it acknowledges how that pain has affected us—all while striving to form a new narrative.

Wholeness is about freedom—and I believe it is possible for each individual to discover for themselves.

Is it easy? Not at all. The pathway can be long and come with obstacles which may make us feel as if we may not make it.

But with the right support and tools—I intrinsically believe we can.

I welcome you, and those you care for, to find it.

The Goal Is Wholeness - Video Discussion

Identity Goes Beyond The Struggle

In the core of who I am—I am convinced none of us are defined by our struggles. Our identity goes far beyond what anyone stole from us, did to us, or how they disappointed us.

While it may be true you or someone you love has faced a deep struggle or have been treated in ways they did not deserve, I believe it does not have to be the key identifier of what makes an individual—them.

Wholeness is still available. Though it requires a journey, it's a pathway to be free of pain's influences—as if it was the only thing to define a life. I believe each of us still have life in front of us and it is filled with the ability for hope, the ability to make a difference in other's lives, and the ability to go out there and have positive and meaningful impact.
