SHIFTING THE NARRATIVE of lost hope

What Is Depression?

Depression is characterized by feeling immense sadness, a lack of energy or interest in previously enjoyed pursuits, and a loss of appetite.

There are several forms of depression which can stem from life changes or biology. It is common for many of us to feel sad or hopeless about a specific situation or experience. This feeling will come and go throughout our life. But when it lasts, it is important to pay attention to those thoughts and feelings and start trying to find out what's going on.

If you or someone you know is depressed—there are numerous ways to take action and fight against the narrative of depression. But, how do we know if we need to take action? The first key is to recognize where you or someone you care about are at.

Is It Okay To Talk About Depression?

Yes. It is absolutely okay to talk about depression. There is no reason let a sense of shame or guilt silence you or someone you care for.

The reasons why individuals face depression range from short-term incidents to life altering events. Some of these are internal. Others are external.

The reason, cause, or longevity behind each story affected by depression is valid—and we acknowledge depression can create major hurdles on the path to seeking wholeness. But that does not mean we do not fight—and fight well.

One of the ways we do that—is to talk about it.

When, Where, & How To Talk About Depression

Opening up about a struggle with depression is a big step. The best way to move through what it means to share with a skilled professional. I cannot take their place, and do not seek to, yet—I have learned a few personal steps which helped me in moments when I needed to share something I felt shaky about.

When thinking about talking about a struggle, it is important to consider the when, what, and how of sharing. When is the right time to open up? Consider a few checkpoints first. The video explains what each of these bullet points mean. So check it out.

When It Is Good To Share:

- After you have told yourself the story first.
- In a distraction-free moment.
- When you are ready.
- When it is critical.

When To Share? - Video Discussion

What To Share About Depression

Just like the question, “When is it good to share?” Many might wonder exactly what to share. When there is a lot going on inside our heads and heart, it can feel overwhelming to quiet those enough to decide what to talk about.

Just as in the “When To Share” video, I have a full conversation which discusses “What to share?” below.

But for starters, let’s consider a few key points.

It is good to share:

- What we think and feel right now.
- What we have thought and felt recently.
- What the source might be.
- And what we would like to do next.

How To Talk About Depression

If you or someone you know are not in immediate danger or harm, and would like to take it a bit slower before opening up, consider these steps to begin walking towards reaching out to a loved one or professional support individual:

4 ways to practice taking about depression:

- Practice telling yourself the story.
- Practice telling an anonymous advocate.
- Practice telling someone who cares about you.
- Practice telling someone who can be with you when you take action or consult a professional.

Each step comes with opportunities for courage.

And yes, each step could face obstacles. So, let's explore those in more detail next.

How To Share? - Video Discussion

<https://youtu.be/8yYr55aO0Lg>

Practice Telling Yourself The Story

Why this is good:

You are 100% in control of telling yourself the story, giving it room to surface however you want, with whatever words you want. No one's reactions are part of your story coming to the surface.

Why this might be hard:

- You may not know where to start.
- You might feel lonely afterwards.

For a more in-depth discussion about these points, check out the video below.

Practice Telling Yourself The Story - Video Discussion

<https://youtu.be/TbqAFnPpk6E>

Practice Telling An Anonymous Advocate

Why this is good:

You are building your courage to let your story be heard by someone else. This can give you confidence to know your story is not invalidated. Through this experience, you are learning how to share your story.

Why this might be hard:

- You wish the connection could last.
- You wish they had given you more.
- Someone may not have been “in the game.”

For a more in-depth discussion about these points, check out the video below.

Practice Telling An Advocate - Video Discussion

<https://youtu.be/cciiuRCg2RI>

Practice Telling Someone Who Cares About You

Why this is good:

Sharing your story with someone who knows you and cares about you allows you to have a conversation with someone who understands your history. This can help you feel the most amount of support and validation.

Why this might be hard:

Sometimes, those who care about us listen and hear us—while they are thinking about how it impacts them. The combination of their own thoughts and feelings might mean they do not react well, even though its important.

For more, check out the video below.

Practice Telling Someone Who Cares - Video Discussion

<https://youtu.be/t6mVirQhbh0>

Practice Telling Someone Who Helps You Take Action

Why this is good:

You might know it is time to take action and get a professional involved. This might mean a doctor, therapist, coach, pastor, or another trained, skilled individual. But, you may not want to do that alone. Involving someone who can be with you might help you to be able to move forward.

Why this might be hard:

At times, it might feel as if they are pushing you past your comfort zone. Feel free to have a conversation with them letting them know how you feel.

What Kind Of Help Exists?

The National Institute of Health reported up to 80% of individuals who were treated for depression began to show positive change within 4-6 weeks of treatment, which generally included medication, therapy, support groups or a combination of these treatments.

This leaves us to ask, “What kind of help exists?”

The resources available for mental health issues and depression range from self-care suggestions to inpatient treatment facilities. The only way to know exactly what type of action one should take, the first key is to talk with a support professional.

There are a host of tools which can help us know steps to taking action. These include:

- Apps Which Offer Support
- Communities With Offer Support
- Finding A Professional

A Conversation On Medication And Natural Remedy

When thinking about sharing our story with a support professional, we may believe the first thing they will do is prescribe talk therapy or medication.

This is likely to be true. If that concerns you, it might help to do a little bit of research in order to understand what it means to take medication, the side effects, and what you can expect when considering your options.

In the video below, we have links to articles and voices which are more qualified to share. We encourage you to continue your research as you get to know what types of help are available.

Who Would Want To Help Me?

“Why someone would want to help an individual struggling with depression?” This question often roams in the minds of individuals who struggle. To answer it, I believe it comes down to the fact we see something you can’t—your future, your pathway, and your value.

Your Future

We have an intrinsic belief that as you walk a path of wholeness and healing—you have a future.

Your Pathway

Trained advocates have studied to figure out what a pathway to wholeness and healing looked like. They want to offer tangible guidance.

Your Value

They have a foundational belief—that you have value. When they speak with you—it is directly tied into a reason why they believe you matter, have importance, and that the outcome of your life is important to them.

The Obstacles In Seeking Help

It is fair to talk about the obstacles along the path, so we are not surprised by them. If you or someone you know have faced one or all of the following—know that I hear you and I see you. I acknowledge the fact these moments can create tremendous setback or make it difficult to want to continue to fight for wholeness. I can only hope you know you are not alone in that battle—and it is worth it to continue to fight on.

- Help Seems Hopeless
- A Question Of Worth
- Lack Of Energy
- Disappointing Attempts

Building A Safety Plan

When taking a stand against depression, it often fights back. Yet, we hope having a pathway to fight back helps each of us continue to live with wholeness.

Please note: Even with the best of plans, there are times in which a crisis is stronger than our plan. In those moments, seek immediate, professional help. The following ideas on a safety plan are not intended to take the place of skilled, professional help.

One such resource which has a fantastic list of tools and resources for creating a safety plan is Challenge The Storm. You can check out their advice here:

Challengestorm.org/safety-plans-mental-health/

They also provided a sample plan that any of us are able to use to help us learn how to build our own plan. You can check that out here:

4 Check Ins To Gauge If Its Time To Move Towards A Safety Plan

How to decide if its an off moment or depression.

1. Check In With Yourself

Give yourself the space to see how you are really doing.

2. Check In With Rest And Play

Do something you love—just because you love it.

3. Check In With Support

If you have begun to notice signals that depression wants to claim your story—it's probably time to check in with individuals who care for you.

4. Check In With Resources

If depression is fighting hard, it might be time to fight back by adding additional resources to your tool kit.

The Goal Is Wholeness

Wholeness is about a state of contentment and peace in a life. It doesn't eliminate the past or any previous pain, instead it acknowledges how that pain has affected us—all while striving to form a new narrative.

Wholeness is about freedom—and I believe it is possible for each individual to discover for themselves.

Is it easy? Not at all. The pathway can be long and come with obstacles which may make us feel as if we may not make it.

But with the right support and tools—I intrinsically believe we can.

I welcome each of you to find it.

Your Identity Goes Beyond The Struggle

In the core of who I am—I am convinced we are not defined by our struggles. Our identity goes far beyond what anyone stole from us, did to us, or how they disappointed us.

While it may be true you or someone you care for have faced a deep struggle or have been treated in ways they did not deserve, I believe this does not have to be the key identifier of what makes any of us—us.

Wholeness is still available. Though it requires a journey, it's a pathway to be free of pain's influences—as if it was the only thing to define our life. I believe each of us still have life in front of us and it is filled with the ability for hope, the ability to make a difference in other's lives, and the ability to go out there and have positive and meaningful impact.
